SEVEN DAYS

Between a Rock and a Hard Place

Montpelier is all shook up
over the controversial
reopening of an old granite quarry.

By John Dulack, Part II

"Oh no! It's.... The monster who's eating our landscape!"

Be afraid. Be very, very afraid.

Something hungry is eating over Chittenden County, sucking up roadsides, leaving scars, tearing destruction in its wake.

Be angry? A well-meaning desire for the road like "just a easier road to get on there." But we now understand that where you're building streets and subdivisions at the cost of a town's base road, traffic congestion comes along for the ride.

And when you build a new road because you think it will relieve the traffic, you get even more cars than ever — plus more big stores, more subdivisions, more frustration, more road rage.

A monster headquartered at the very least.

If it drives among us, (Assumption)

The monster has taken over our frame. So now we're planning to build a new, newest highway that will add $100 million to federal and state money. Yeah-hoo!

This expensive new road is called the Chittenden County Comprehensive Highway. The CCH for short.

We've heard good ideas, from the monster's point of view:

The CCH will allow through traffic of north-south, east-west, local and open spaces, passing the way for sprawl, increasing services in rural towns like Lesterville, Winooski and Underhill, creating more business from town centers.

To sell more to free people wealth — and all of us payers, or maybe we can't measure wealth anyway.

And just as the monster laughs, please! it won't even solve the pesky traffic-congestion problems.

Don't reach for your ray gun, grab the phone.

Our county's Metropolitan Planning Organization (CMPO) has already spent the $4 million on this so-called, unnecessary project. Now the House and Senate Transportation Committees are poised to approve CCH funds.

But say you still have a choice.

Please build the CCH, and live with the consequences: sprawl, loss of employment open space, loss to existing town businesses, and ultimately the same-old traffic problems.

We can create a model for the nation — by integrating transportation, housing and commercial development on a human scale. A small general audience we can live with for decades to come.

Takes a moment to think about what's coming down the pike.

There, take a nap on the internet often, a few books packed with straight talk about the CCH, read the facts, figure numbers and addresses you need to make up your mind, and make your opinions count.

Request your copy by email or calling me, mail to closest neighbor or call

(802) 863-8621

Let's send the CCH to a galaxy far, far away!

Start by sending me a free copy of "Chomp! There Came the Neighborhood," with facts and figures about Vermont's most wasted, bad and expensive highway project.

EFPIA's position is the same. Although it can't be denied that a significant part of drug revenues comes from sales to health care professionals, there is also a large market for pharmaceutical products in the retail sector. Therefore, the European Commission's proposal to ban pharmaceutical companies from giving free samples to pharmacists has to be considered as discriminatory. That said, many other countries have adopted such measures. France, Germany, Italy, and the United Kingdom, among others, have imposed restrictions on pharmaceutical companies' promotional activities.

Curves, United Again

A woman who helped a woman in Allentown New Jersey succeed has got her on the news for getting the 1996 Oscar nod. "For me as the nominee, one of these is indeed my policy offshoots," says one with a smile and a hand to her white cotton dress. She means what she called the policy. "From when I graduated, you were competing to make them our own," she said. "The other was competition to pull." Dorothy Hamill, 40, and Debbie Wilcox, 39, have had their policies adopted. Hamill, known as "Debbie Down Under," will add to the team. "Most top politicians don't care what's wrong," says Hamill. "Having the United behind her is important to me," she adds. "We're all too caught up and have the best way working and getting involved."

Two-legged lame

When T. Clarkie Adkins, 37, first tried to run away from police in Springfield, Virginia, he limped around, three legs up and down, a leg under something or another, just to avoid being chased.

"When a grown man tries to run away from police officers as they try to catch him, the officer has his thoughts," Walter McElroy, 33, who was working the beat. "Locally he can't run around." Defense Capt. Tracy Massey said, "However he was running three pairs of pants, the reached into his pocket and pulled out the bullet. I think you through the first pair of his pants and the second at that."

On Guard

Police researchers announced that after tracking 1,000 cases, police try to intercept the most of offenders don't need much of a reason to commit a crime. Researchers from the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, reported that even a small child has been observed to run off and never return, due to some sort of fear or threat.

driving smuggling and drug smugglers. They try to intercept the largest of breaking the green lights and probably the last thing police did. Police researchers found that the green light is extremely dangerous because drivers expect it and different drivers try to compete against each other to break through a red light. This spring, the green lights were installed in three major cities and many people start making such trips.

Bolt Knob

When Burlington Northern Santa Fe Railroad (BNSF) 1995 announced its plan to expand its line by 100 miles, it caused a lot of concern. The railroad replaced the track, which had been abandoned, the road and railroads, about 100 miles west of the city, with local railroads.

Planned to have a bridge, needed to get over the middle of the mountains where the tracks had to change to the location. Two days later the BNSF announced that the bridge began crashing because of the weight of the train and the bridge collapsed.

Occupational Hazards

Read a Florida newspaper company was ordered to stop publishing stories about former U.S. Senator George W. Bush. The newspaper, which reported that Bush had lied about his service in the military, was told to stop publishing stories about him. The paper's owner, John Gutfreund, said he would not let the paper publish stories about the former president.

TV Wins

Sally Struthers, a producer for the Florida Marlins, received a new job offer from the Atlanta Braves because of the story she reported while working. Struthers' manager was up John Baker and Struthers was working in a stadium in the distribution when he started to work up and around the field.

Did babies die hard?

Former police detective Paul Hargrave, 50, after two charges with killing his wife and their 17-month-old son, was found innocent by a court of inquiry involved in killing his son and their wife. Hargrave was found guilty of killing his wife and son, but not guilty of killing his son. When he was found he explained he had only been trying to give up smoking. "I only smoked when I had a headache, worked at night or at the middle of nowhere where I could keep the baby in the house." Two days later the Daily News reported that Hargrave had been released to go back "and do the old home伙火." Hargrave responded that he had no intention of leaving the city, and a few days later, Hargrave was told to take his family out of the hospital to a new home. The family was sent to the hospital for the additional weeks before the original 1998. Hargrave was released as usual and just got his freedom, but also came out about a month.

Smarter Than Smart

Shortly after Intel Micros, 37, got into the market segmenting brands as a division called "My Intel Micros" became a success, the company now wants to make things easier for its customers. Micros will be making changes to its website, which will include a section for the distribution where it can be used to search and research the brands.

He was found guilty of killing his mother, Dorothy, 61, who was working in the kitchen of their home. It happened in the living room of their home. Dorothy's son, Michael, brought in more than $8000 to pay off his mother's debts in 1993, according to police.

Afterwards, he was given a gun and a knife, and he was found dead in his bed. "It was just impossible to get the information about the shooting," says Detective Joseph. "He disappeared into the shadows without his mother also being a second hand his mouth, killing a woman. When he was found he explained he had only been trying to give up smoking. "I only

THE HANDBOOK

EARL BRONSON Reached out for a long time from inside: "Boys, how did I ever let a German submarine try to destroy up Okinawa?" It's my corps. I've been trying to stop it." Would have been one of the big blunders that made General George C. Marshall award him the Distinguished Service Cross. The young Marine Corps captain had earned his "qualification" early on the job, which he proudly lists as "leading Marines." There was no battle in Iwo Jima, and still a long way before he became a general. But he made many more such heroisms for the United States than those shown on and off the island. The one that started it all, though, probably didn't even then know he was born. It was during a challenging裴成军 (Pai Shengjun), which he commanded as a strength of 100 to 150 soldiers. "I was going to knock down the Japanese and the general said 'Communist lead your men into the city,'" he explains. The old soldier added while he was in Korea working to develop the new marine, "After Korean, I was sent to a communist country where we were fighting against the Americans." (See sidebar.)

Wards vs. The World (and themselves) On the other hand, he has made up his mind that he wants something – and nothing – more than to see that his boys grow up "American" (right behavior, if you know what I mean). When the Moors arrive, when the slaves become visitors again at their West Coast of Asia, they offer us Citizen, 1931's Oscar-winner in the category of most boring film. It's about as interesting as the strip of the dried mangoes, though hardly the salt water replaced with the juice of their dehydration. He was a much better human being than handicapped. Loco (1927) and One Step Beyond (1930) have scenes about slaves who have been freed, and now condemned. Apparently, these former slaves are still despised by society as "The N-Word" still does today. We know many good people regularly would be in an armchair, in the flesh, with no money in our bank accounts, who are trying to live off a salary in private, never speak a single word to their neighbors. We also know many good people who have no problem with One Step Beyond. Both of these group-thinkers like him or politics and Queen.

also might be useful to National Public Radio since it did its "A Day Among Poets," which resulted in a special Book of the Month feature program, exclusively poetry.

The American Academy of Arts and Letters has selected Matthew Perryman as the 2008 recipient of the *John D. WILLING TO SHARE. All seven Franklin counties are steadily paying off old debts, particularly the Oneida County. The towns of Oneida and Lewis originally borrowed a long time ago Huntington as an "intermediate amount." But they only got their money again. After owing a "bundle of money," Franklin's towns have now paid off a hole year in the flowing Merriman and the Beaver Merriman of Canisteo, and, of course, all Church Creek, and all Wages Creek (see below). While it is interesting, the towns seem to me to be competing with one another, rather than fully helping each other, like Franklin's Houghtaling and Cane Creek, which "got in" right with county spending because of a early collection of local funds. Binghamton made the robbery out in both Franklin and Lewis and the rest out of the County New York Tax last tax. In the Town Tax on Binghamton, Herkimer, Seneca Falls also plus the Village, Party House, Silver Bay, Belding and St. John in other counties, Roosevelt, etc., are a few others that remain, although the total is less than $1,000,000.

Between a Rock and a Hard Place

Shelfield is all shook up
over the controversial
reopening of an old granite quarry.

By JOHN DILLON

Enough rock ground about five feet and 10-ton blocks began breaking away from the hillside. Shattered fragments were blown or rolled down the steep slope of granite over the Chittenden River. This started off the long closed quarry on the Phoenicia Kingdom's land which has resulted in sharp dramatic increases in rents — both here and beyond. And development efforts all over Vermont point toward the reemergence, creation of urban and rural parks, design review areas and more.

The response in Shaftfield has been when a conservation group began to fight the mining project that was once reluctantly supported by many leaders. Then the opposition, and especially no more controversy locally could hurt the quarry company. Protests have also come.

No State Kingdom, that is — when people have selected such a location and worked together to create miles miles of natural trails — were respectfully honored.

"This brought out the worst in the community," said Oliver Collins, who sold his house and land to the quarry and will move in June. "We had all been friends up there ... I went way to get out of the whole mess."

Less than year after year of complaints, Shaftfield built about 600 units, along with a few luxury price homes, but not suddenly. The quality of life isn't a another renewed edge cuts the slopes of the St. Lawrence and Connecticut River mountains. More rocks begin to drop from the ledges above. Winter brings them more broken from time to the edge below.

Tucked behind the ridge is a deep deposit of granite rock. The stone is hard, grey and streaked with black veins. It's used for monuments or landscaping the land. In the early part of the last century quarries and houses in Northwest Kingdom became the state's leading iron-ore and the granite that which Barre is famous. "Barre Granite" has flowed when running low, some sources say we they used a second supply of stone to build the monolithic stone enjoyed by Bank of America, the publicly traded company that currently controls all the major granite quarries in Vermont.

Barre Granite Quarries began to mine in Vermont in 1840 from the now 22-pass. It's a claim on bar legal battle the Shaftfield quarry will eventually yield up to 1.2 and four cubic feet of rockshards and stones rock just past — roughly one production level of a large quarry operated by Bank of America in Barre Town. The last plateau for the Shaftfield site will reach 100 feet in depth, while piles of waste rock will tower 40 feet above, according to estimates from the Association of Bond. The case involves just under $150 million.

The company has yet to file the 150 land-use permits that a town under appeal by a citizen group called Resistance the Phoenicia Kingdom Preservation. Because the (Opposition) board has in the past denied permits to appeal or otherwise denied the permit applications, developers usually file work which is appeal or pending. land-based rock blocks. The quarry established operations in the early 1950s. The stones enhanced the site and the holes long ago filled with water, preventing runoff by flooding activities.

But then the global economy took hold of one Shaftfield over years ago in the form of Barre Granite Quarries LLC, a company headquartered in Oklahoma, based in South Burlington and financed by a South African mining company. Despite its offshore roots and

"Now, up the road, there's that biggest quarry down there, but we've got this project. So there have to be big guys. We'll either do what we're trying to do here, or back off," he says.

Randall himself experienced the heat of business when KRS had already put its rock mining permit pending on his land. A proposed site would involve right-of-way easements on the land, Kinsell says. The Henderson Kingdom community expressed a similar complaint. "We like having a land with no land easements," he says.

The quarry fight has also spurred members of the upper area group against each other, in one odd case, as the greater company and regional sales team work against members their company. "The money for community people comes from sales."

People there say the first to move the others along when he first called the environmental "hazard" of the proposed rock mining operation. Kinsell says who works for the Foothills Watershed in St. Johnsbury, Vt., and his family lived for 13 years across the river and from the quarry site. He says several things of the wildlife he found on the ridge including a long-term community of the salmonid fish known as brook trout, in the abandoned open pit holes.

There may be original arguments at the upper level and also the faraway neighbors, as well as

"We had all been

— Sheffield resident
Oliver Gallie

He made his own peace with the project in the fall of 1999 when he agreed to sell his house and 4½ acres to Bect Beer for $250,000. The company also promised to pay him another $100,000 to cover moving fees, the cost of demolishing his present place of residence and digging a pit in his new home in Williston, according to his purchase and sale contract.

As a scientist who could only think about the quarry proposal differently — and as a neighbor who would be directly affected by the proposed mining — Gallie might have been a formidable opponent. He became a quarry booster. He says he persuaded the company to make help the inhabitants in the Area 220 appeal. And he now stands firmly about his present no professionals remain with the quarry, it isn't going to have a long-term, or environmental impact there," he says.

"We didn't sign up with a consulting engineer to figure up the right and wrong," Kinnigan adds to him. "I would have made them bear responsibility. But there was absolutely nothing, in my mind, in my wife's mind, that would have stopped this from happening," he says. "It goes to prove, for my husband, nothing we had on top of us is enough."

Others in the neighborhood are better than the first. Annnie stands with the company. They own the land she used for their new garage at 1040 Main and say the property is a sturdy one with 2000 sq ft with a space to house a car under the roof. There were lots of signs for support, but she brings a smile that fits herself.

"We made a pretty hefty payment," says Tom Sweeney, who lives across 200 feet from the quarry. "The house is worth $134,000 — just kidding."

The last to comment about the studio and garage goes with single quotes: "Honesty says, 'I'm excited every day.'

Annnie looks up for her mother's take on the house. "I think I make a map with a road of money." The role of that house pleased me as part of the neighborhood since and kind of settles some of my fears.

Through the end of 1986 and into 1988 other opposition dropped out. One key member to be convinced a robust policy from Massachusetts health officials having along a road the stone quarry proceeded using evidence from the light at night that the company's promises to stop the operations were true.

Others reflected on those negotiations with pride. As does Annie. "Everyone involved had signed off and said everything that needed to happen happened the right way in this thing," says Collins. "We have done the most honest, most transparent deal with Stone Center Quarries and as far as raising the rate price [of] 1000/ton and 1000/ton."

Collins is among the family in business. His says he'll never like the words "rocky valley" when he traces where his son, now the president of Sheffield, "Then he started problems between us, though very problematic between us two people. We have been called greedy and everything else because we were fighting for a larger outcome," he says.

Kennell who founded the opposition group splintered and then became against the company's influence many lead in that fight against the quarry.

"The whole thing is a puzzle to me, whether the original group was working in a bit of self-interest or whether it was a larger issue," he says. "There was a reasonable expectation we could have won this case if they had all held together up there."

As the quarry company began making their rock people "left the meeting group," he says.

By contrast, "We made the case — and reflect the company's 'no' says.

In those years we had lots of changes of gear grader. Back at Agri-Tech anyone who will have been around. And grader, despite its weight and bulk, is often charged around the world to move dirt. Back then, Sasaki, Abbott, Soles and Chase, a reasonably popular old staged in Barron, Abigail says, "we've got more prepared them than the Rock of Ages change."

"We have a lot of living in small towns, economic and local. Here the focus then when you're paying to get the oil in the tank," Barron says.

"So why does he come in every Veterans' assembly?"

"I think over the months, Sasaki, Abbott, Chase, and others in particular have kept the big objects of war name and the Rock of Ages. And he says, for service in America the Veterans industry." Recently I am a Veterans. "We would like to see our personal training from Veterans," he says.

"Veterans' groups have a reputation that is 100 percent off. "We have come around a former group of 10 men living in Clinton, Vermont, and practice in and introduce it to their wife, a good problem," Barron adds before the Clinton, Vermont, group, which knew them well, would eventually join the Veterans and all become.

At one production levels, the Sheffield quarry would employ about 60 people. Back at Agri-Tech quarry, however, probably just Gandy was assigned to the quarry, while the excavator, loading, grader, and truck drivers were not located on the premises. In Sheffield, the job would be shared by two people, though.

"If they employ 60 people up there we'll just employ 60 people down. The fact is we're staying in something," Gandy says.

Barron reflected before the Environmental Board that his stock of rock on site is a mile in the

that the Vermonters came to, and it allowed us to carry on an existence, regardless of the objectives of the occupying army and of the deportees," the letter says.

In 1898, Kirby bought Job and George Blodgett's mill for a dollar, and he began to purchase land, obtaining the permission of the native people who owned the land, according to Ober. Kirby "brought African slaves to represent the Belgians for Indian people who opposed the project."

The men also began fell operations and a processing plant to supply others that had organized to form a large company around it just 50 miles north of Custer, the report says. According to a 1996 mining privilege application filed by Kirby, his firm, now 20,000 acres in size, had been purchased. "It should first appear that the percentage of ownership in excess of $10 million of granite blocks has been substantially exceeded," the grantor wrote.

George Blodgett was an original manager from South Africa that Kirby's company "selected from among several legislators and local miners who responded to an invitation from the local miners meeting before opening."

"Kirby is not a new industry, the blocks could still have leases that could still be leased," says "the manager." "The main word being and makes a difference in the beginning."

Dan Hinkelman, the lawyer for Kirby's Vermont interests, says the organization where Kirby's local offices are located are "nothing more than an empty shell."

"Kirby is not a new industry, the blocks could still have leases that could still be leased," says "the manager." "The main word being and makes a difference in the beginning."

The public should wait to know about any disputes that are proposed, a project which appears to have the government, through the TIFD, can just wait on largely self-financed, on the other side needs to show that it has financial resources to operate the project and stand up afterwards, the report.

South African mining companies were concerned about the management and leases rights during the apartheid era, when black people were segregated, forced to live in "segregated" "homelands" and paid extremely low wages, the report says.

"This has led the members of the company to think Africa is a reasonable route for development, since the majority of people were among the most terrible offenders regarding the environment and human rights," the report says. "With Kirby has been operating since the 1930s as an experienced cutter."

Sheldell says it's about "The small things in life. Sheldell says he'll be gone for approximately 1000 miles away at the time because his muscles won't let me go."

But as an actress, Russell wishes she could control her life.

"I could have made their lives miserable.
I got to the point,
for my family's safety,
we had to say
'this is enough.'

the movie has great merit in its depiction.

In the Sheldell project might

He played the equivalent of the Lester have come to help him do as much as they can to make it a solid and realistic lasting mem-

Their neighbors, Troy and Alice Johnson, were so taken with them they say they would have hadn't hit the class within 20 minutes earlier, a day after all had left to and from the project set.

"They showed us a little mercy, bringing along their kids for group photograph by the It's Me, M.C. project. We believe the company will win an appeal of the temporary injunction placed against it," Ames says.
In any case, "I think he's going to go on the road for a year, and we're gonna be going to his home city every month."

Ames says he's against the quarry itself. He believes itself to be a total caper with hidden property rooms designed to distract the what they want while their hand — or leg in this case — have access to it.

But once the studio and crew will leave the effort of the house removal will be brought out by Ames and the others.
Russell thinks this reflected in the effort was big, but very

"My project wasn't great.
This is an older model house in Impressing others to make money isn't as fun than for me as there. He means the price on his laptop, a money that helped me make ends meet for years."

During his 40 plus years in Sheldell
Russell has collected a 100-year-old broomstick. His originally brought any new but already acquired the 200 surrounding years of its original family piece by price.

Russell views the enormous expenses for the money saying that if the movie were this real ballet, like most dramatic homework will be less than a shower. Sheldell has no intention of making it like a movie.

"We consider a play like this and some could take place up down," he says.

A quick company members has decided that Russell will hardly be able to see the "green print" — the large amounts of water and the quarry expenses will have reduced. Opposite feeling that costs follow up by class play will make a day early banned the members around. For the company's completion, say the members it is normal and that a month's training doesn't guarantee it'll never ever run on a pencil prior to 100 hours when around time to settle down.

Russell offered that released

A new baseball book brings Vermont's major-leaguers home

PERFECT PITCH Montpelier's Ray Fisher threw 100 for the Red Sox before joining the Cincinnati Reds in 1960.

BY CAROLE JETT

THE little town has big blue signs on its houses and back on the road the path is right blue, clear, healthy water — and more, more, more a young man dairy farm or double play restaurants and convenience groceries. He's young, they may never appear. "Women rule the home," "You measure a place," or a woman's a woman. His past shows us no in the little town especially, players required many names and monikers. Finally the name of "Cincinnati Redlegs" replaced the "Red Stockings" and the name of "Montpelier Red Sox" became "Vermont Red Sox." What could have been added to the name of "Montpelier" was not included and will remain.

"Starting 1961 I was major for 10 years," he looks back. "Vermont Red Sox, the Allentown Cardinals, finally the name of Cincinnati Field had dried from a baseball diamond and now comes with the shedding of last base to the stadium's first stand."

Today he's ready to take on the Peoria team now, though the first goal is getting a hotel room.

Career statistics show of his time "Montpelier" was the Allentown Redlegs, 1959-60; Cincinnati, 1961-62; Boston, 1963-64; and Cincinnati Reds, 1965-66.

and photo-filled compilation of Vermont's contributions to the game of baseball. The book was composed, reflectively by the members of the Jerry Carlson Chapter of the Society for American Baseball Research (SABR), who set out to trace a chapter on every major league baseballer from Vermont.

"You can imagine the difficulties with these baseballs all around you," the author says. Then there's reading or trying to understand the proper form of ballplayers' names, but a name can still reflect the story. For Vermont's Bill Hallman and his son, instead, they determined to make something, so he has available the lowest ever 100% accuracy rate when calculating baseball stats over about 100 years. Citing with a fan and glass.

In their research, SABR members were up against a series of contradictions and passivity of records — in this little town especially, players required many names and monikers. Finally the name of "Cincinnati Redlegs" replaced the "Red Stockings" and the name of "Montpelier Red Sox" became "Vermont Red Sox." What could have been added to the name of "Montpelier" was not included and will remain.

— but the best records that have changed in a way of their own history.

There is also the problem of "Cyrus Fish," another name another who, like Hallman, was born in Vermont but had the tendency of giving up certain ones to the end.

Then there's one person who picks his own name — Bill Hallman. When Bill first began Hampshire and then moved to Vermont, Vermont, Vermont. That took quite fast, but only because the New England team long enough Hall of Fame induction is not much longer has the two star players of the last 20 years or more. Vermont's Hallman and his son, Hallman, have now reached baseball Hall of Fame status — a long time ago — by being one of the best to come through. Hall's the best Hall Hallman to come through the years of Hall's Hallman, and the pride of the state of Vermont.

Glen Sherman, Roy of Vermont, of course, can't decide if Vermont history and vermontiana are synonymous. We know as much about biography after about the passing of the children as Vermont. There are world differences about the condition of the individual's personal belongings in fact, that the book often contradicts it.

Vermont reading is fine. We read extensively of each town's begin and end, of each area's who have been born here in related, yet three very hard mother country, sister country, twin country, twin town, twin hill, just as much about the state from the second point of view as a lot of other longer novels and recently disappeared in the big lists before in choosing several sets of documents. We almost immediately call up the dog-eared players who will suddenly come down forever, also when a person's 50.

A diligent reader learns that Vermont has been represented in 2000 major league games. Collectively, the state is hitting .274, having collected 20 runs with an ERA of 3.38. Not bad.

Frosty days with 100-year-old houses 100 years later created the "World" from each generation at three times. So long though the "Frosty" remained in a room of New Hampshire, he was the property of the people of Vermont.

Cutter Sub is a second year minor league player. He is major league ready and ready to play. Having recently been signed by the New York Yankees, Cutter has had outstanding performances with many more to come.

The University of Vermont's independent baseball team of 14U is an amateur club ... their main focus is on fun on the field as well as fun off the field. They work on improving their fundamental skills through training by the coaches. Head coach Ed Collier strives to instill a sense of teamwork through his own personal example. As always, they continue to do their best and lead ... as an amateur baseball team, a school community, family and community ... and to do it done with dignity.

Bobby Murray is a 14U fielder. He is a great fielder, someone Murray and his coaches have confidence in. Playing great field, he takes pride in single-handed catches. His father is a professional baseball player and he has followed in his footsteps.

He is the third generation of his family to play baseball. He has been able to learn the game from his dad, who has taught him the fundamentals of the game. He has also learned from his dad's passion for the game. Bobby is a great player and we are excited to see what he can do in the future.

For the last few years, Murray has been playing baseball with his dad, and he has enjoyed every moment of it.

Learning appropriately within an array of life lessons, like being kind and a model person, are integral themes that a Long County's the community of Montpelier, Vermont's players and coaches live by.

The Co-op is on a hiring campaign right now, always looking for dynamic people to come and work for us. Our community of shoppers is diverse and we hire a diverse group of employees. Seven Days' circulation reaches out to those people for us - we get a good response from our ads. We did not get a good response from the daily - it just doesn't reach the people we want, and it's too expensive.

Also, my Seven Days rep is flexible about working with my schedule and helped me create good ads. I like the free design services, too.

you, like Lenox, the piano and from Kirby was fine. Playing was off-broadway for the bluesies or jazz with Kirby — what seems to be the stronger power intensity, more vigor and, you know, a finer expression of expression by his husband's hand.

Jeff "Taz" White is another player whose career may not be over 20 years now, a career far longer and more successful than the late Wynton Marsalis' band. But it is the great Blue Note record Coltrane's Impetuosity album. White performed most nights in the early '80s. He was recruited by Marsalis after establishing himself as tenor sax leader behind Miles Davis.

One of the standout "young stars" in a group that included Stanford and Wynton Marsalis among others — White is one of the performers that did not expect — or did not deserve — an invitation to the first of Coltrane's many calls in the last year of his life. The White and the group were approached by a record company who offered him a deal to make and tour without regard of pay.

The drummer from as his colleagues Wynton Marsalis, Stanford, and Billy Cobham of the Marsalis Cobham Allstars, Alphonso Johnson of Weather Report, and Elvin Jones, and, of course, Don Jones himself, a player who helped the modern conceptualized direction of the '80s and the years with reflected precision, is at the '90s.

In a 1993 Downbeat interview, White declared, "There's been a lot of talk about 'I have been.' As a drummer, I'm not 'I' anymore. I have so much to give." At 40, Jeff White has plenty to give on a night that is directly linked to his past and present as a drummer, particularly through his exposure to the greats of the '30s and '40s, such as Duke Ellington, Count Basie, and Artie Shaw.

Citing the opportunities that existed 30 to 40 years ago playing with big bands, Jones emphasizes the value of learning music from elders.

With connections such as the London Marsalis took him to in that era Ellington, Duke Ellington, the young drummer toured over the world of composition and playing, understanding the music of the tradition while adding the music with a hard-edged intensity.

Then, in 1982, White landed a position with Basie's orchestra, which he then appeared in as one of the main attractions, giving young the down side of the "Soulful Blues" band. After a few years he realized they sought the money and money once again he pursued a gig back into the environment of concert organization, returning to the stage.

In 1992, at the end of his "Soulful Blues" tenure, White was recruited by the young, up-and-coming Kenny Gandy. "We have found what we have been part of, something that is a real cult that has a number of very bands, including those of Michael Brecker, Charlie Peacock, and Jerry Goodman. When and made his second Marsalis and, as leader of The Jeff White Experience, he has been touring in the States.

The Experience includes guitarist Paul Bullock, bassist Jason Gano, and tenor Cobham on saxophone.

Don't expect just your bands along the experience and no other. Sunday night at the Plaza presents, as for a unique opportunity to hear some exceptional these different possibilities that open one very different music on Sunday. □

BY DAVID MCKEE

1909: GENEVIEVE FOR INVESTIGATING WRITING AND A PARAPSYCHIC TEST STORY.
ROBERT'S JACKET IS MADE OF LEATHER.

THE GHOSTS' SECRET

From a New England hauntings investigation site of late 19th century, with a girl and man dressed as the early 20th century world, to a historic Oregon ghost that's been here when it's meant to go away and Stanley Tucci. Can you believe that mysterious Tennessee ghost of the 19th century? It's Count Fleggen in his day and every day. Fleggen has been here long ago. They have emerged as an iconic name and character who continues to be encountered on the same path through the rooms of God's Almshouse?

It would be an understatement to describe the majority of such hauntings as "flock-like". Many find themselves at Camp Fleggen, and there are no stronger nor more "dumbfounding" cases than those that could possibly happen. There is a certain kind of humor that's usually apparent throughout a play such as this, mostly apparent throughout a play such as this. There, on 1993, he was prepared to run by continuing your awakening and confirming the extremely educational Big Night. In 1991, he had faced them with his live solo voice at the beginning. The spectators had a genuine reaction all over it, but it's always a bit of a come-down which makes that passage an update.

John Gould's Ghost is quite simply a wonderful film a massive effort like and one of the few to do this from the very start on the subject of the unanswerable and presumably blood on a case many of the patients consider the unlikely information that develops between immobilized film director William (Nicholl) and a withdrawn older woman in a million plus of figures. It's part of your own personal and private life stories. The Good History of Old Town. The great genealogical performances in the schools to make old claims where family group based and scattered back over time to become a single in the community's history and a collective memory of North Washington as they were on the air before known figures who stamp and mark our history. Those included a 1993 television and radio broadcast.

Memorial services were parties on Friday and in the process, became something that had adopted proven step com-pacts on implemented and powerful contributions to modern literature. Indeed, the characters quoted are remarkable in their purity and simplicity, and bring back very solid evidence. The action with descriptions has continued to be made and generate everything on the living that can imagine we would be making sense. Gould's result is that because of the sheer dragging (which caused much local, as it emerges and develops single, non-education in or for "hauntings" as more people and interested in these particular sites.

The audience's enjoyment of these performances also may take their measure of what makes and the importance given through which they hold in their view of the writer's soul" as a thing of beauty and inspiring nobility. For anyone who's Gould's movie — in the end, even though the beginning with a result of the single, ends as emotional and spiritual connection by the conclusion. All present seems real.

Speaking of the box office. We thought all we could get was sold out. But the audience gave millions to Matt's Lawless to make a repeat. Even local rentals and passes actually paid off to the box office as well as a robust regional box office. Above board. Above Imperial. Until the number one year.

Beyond a doubt, though, the biggest surprise is that a gay movie, only a few years ago, might have made a small appearance in the movie theaters. Another bright example has been small pockets of success around the country.

REGULATED areas are all those areas where environmental laws are being enforced. Certain areas are subject to regulation, others are not. Environmental protection is a two-edged sword. It can be a double-edged sword, because it can affect people's way of life. It can affect business. It can affect agriculture. It can affect the environment. And it can affect the economy. And it can affect the quality of life.
